Participants will look at the role that stories play in social change work and will learn about the power of stories as tools for connection and reflection. They will also learn how to develop and tell their own stories, as a strategy to move people to action.

Learning objectives include:

• Explore the power of narratives and their place in social change work.
• Learn to identify or build or tell their own story, the story of our community, and the story of our call to action.
• Practice building and telling stories for change

Facilitator:
Jill Porter has worked as the Community Development Advisor at the Centre for Community Engaged Learning for 8 years. In her role, she supports community engagement strategies and practices for the Centre and focuses on partnership development and capacity building for community non-profit organizations.
