

Friedman Award for Scholars in Health 2018 Application Form

Overview

The Friedman Award for Scholars in Health supports learning and research opportunities for graduate students or medical residents working in the broad area of health, to bring new perspectives to their education and further their career. Awards of up to $50,000 each will be granted for six or more months of study. Award amount will be at the discretion of the adjudication committee. Each recipient of a Friedman Award will be designated a "Friedman Scholar".

The Friedman Award for Scholars in Health is open to any UBC graduate student or UBC medical resident studying in the area of health. 'Health' is interpreted very broadly, and includes health promotion and disease prevention, mental health research, laboratory sciences related to medicine or health, public health, health services research, or any area intended to impact human health.
